Inventing the Future

Imagine a computer that ____ faces of people and help you to remember their names, or a smart car that ____ when he is falling asleep at the wheel. Scientists and engineers at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) Media Lab believe all this and more will soon be possible. Projects like smart cars, smart houses, wearable computers and virtual pet dogs may contain the seeds of future innovations that will make life safer, easier, healthier or simply more fun. Scientists and engineers are literally inventing the future.

Read.

To live the longest and healthiest life possible, get smarter. Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation (IHME) data show that past a certain threshold, health and wealth are just weakly correlated. However, overall health is closely tied to how many years people spend in school. Mexico, for instance, has a fifth the per capita gross domestic product (GDP) of the United States, but, for women, more than 50 percent of the latter's schooling.
