- Read the text and answer the questions below.

I found out during my Biology classes that sponges are very interesting animals. Why? Well, first of all, they eat and drink through their pores – tiny holes all over their bodies – and are able to reproduce by themselves. Their digestive cells go and catch the food, instead of what happens to us! Sponges are really old and simple – some of the oldest animals on Earth. I've always loved them – my teacher said they are "beautifully simple". And I couldn't agree more. I mean, with no organs, it's pretty fascinating how they can do many things that other animals also do, and with a big hole in the middle! So... Why don't you research a little about sponges and find out that they're much more than just sea animals with holes?

1. What does the text say about the age of sponges?

2. What happens in a sponge's digestion that doesn't happen in ours?

3. How many organs does a sponge have?

Find the word that match with the description in the text:

4. "science that studies living creatures"

5. "gap, opening"

6. In the text, find three characteristics of sponges and write them out.
